SCHEDULE 1

DATA CONTROLLER / DATA PROCESSOR RESPONSIBILITIES

Our Company information notice has been sent to all current data subjects and is sent to all new data subjects.

The Privacy Policy is made available to the data subjects at the point of collection and/or Validation.

The legitimate interest assessment details the Company's definition of legitimate interest for the licensing of data to third-parties.

In terms of data controller and data processor, these are the definitions that the Company uses in determining data protection responsibilities (below). These are derived from the Information Commissioner's Office ("ICO") and Data Protection Law, and form the basis of our data protection policy, processes and notices.

Definitions:

"Data Controller" determines the purposes for which and the means by which personal data is processed. So, if a company/organisation decides 'why' and 'how' the personal data should be processed, it is the data controller. More than one organisation can be the data controller of the same data, if they are individually responsible for different elements of use, process and data protection. The ICO's definition provides flexibility, such that it can allow one data controller to mainly, but not exclusively, control the purpose of the processing with another data controller. In other words, just because restrictions are imposed on the use of personal data, this does not necessarily mean that there is a controller – processor relationship.

"Data Processor" – processes personal data only on behalf of the controller.

Based on these definitions, we have produced the following assessment of our respective data protection responsibilities and obligations where a Client is licensing Company data:

- The Company provides HCP data to the Client under licence.
- The Company is the data owner (in that it has rights in the data), and a data controller, in that it determines how the data can be used by licensees, which is detailed in the Licence and /or Services Agreement. The restrictions put in place on the use of data are not just there for commercial purposes, they are also there for compliance. As a data owner and controller, we need to have a record of how, where, when and who uses our data, so we can fulfil not just our data protection obligations but also our commitments made to the data subjects in our information processing and privacy notices. Copies can be available on request.
- The Company provides warranties that the data is collected, processed and validated within relevant data protection laws, and can be passed to third-parties under licence. Our legitimate interest assessment for licensed data provides details of this. Copies can be made available on request.
- The Company has sent an information processing notice to all data subjects, detailing that their data will be processed under legitimate interest, and may be used by third-parties for a variety of 'services and communications', which are 'healthcare related' and where appropriate 'relevant to their professional role'. In respect of WH's decision to make the data available, The Company is the data controller.
- The Client works within the terms of the licence in respect of the data provided to them under licence by the Company.

- The Client, once the data is licensed from the Company, is responsible for its own data protection obligations in respect of using the data under the terms of the licence. This would include defining their own legal basis for using the Company data, and any other data protection responsibilities that they feel they have in relation to that legal basis, the day-to-day use of the data and the nature of their individual business, for example: The Company is not involved in any scripts used for calls to data subjects or processes directly related to the provision of Client's services, communications or its own activities. In respect of this data processing, the Client would be the data controller. If the Company is sending out a communication (mailing or email) on behalf of the Client, then this would be from the Client. The Company's role is to provide the platform (in the case of email) or the facilities (in the case of mailing). In this instance, the Client is the data controller and the Company is the data processor.
- The Client is responsible for managing any opt-outs or permissions, given to them directly by an individual data subject. An opt-out from the Client does not automatically translate into an opt-out from the Company and vice versa. The Client would be the data controller.
- The Client may use the data for i) its own purposes for analysis and reporting. In these circumstances, Client is not processing this data on behalf of the Company. The Company is not involved in the processes used in the carrying out of these tasks. The Client would be the data controller.
- The Client may also use the data for ii) the purposes of providing sales and marketing services to its own clients. In these circumstances, the Client is not processing this data on behalf of the Company, but in order to provide its services to, or communicate with, or to its own clients. The Client is responsible for carrying out these services in compliance with Data Protection Laws. The Company is not involved in the processes used in the carrying out of these services. The Company therefore cannot be responsible for any data protection breach pertaining to the provision of these services. In these instances the Client will be a data controller. Where a Client third-party is using the Company to carry out services on behalf of the Client (with the written permission of the Company, by way of a DSA), then both the Client and the third-party would be data controllers.
- Should the Client receive a data subject access request from a data subject, they would be responsible for responding to this directly but may say that the original source of the data is the Company. The Client would only be responding about the data they have about the individual, which may not be all the data the Company has. If a data subject wanted to see all of the Company information then they would need to make a DSAR direct to the Company. In addition, the Client may also have data attributes, activity etc, against that individual that the Company are not privy to, and which they may also be required to disclose. The Client would be the data controller.
